Background:

“We are all in it—all the way,” President Franklin D. Roosevelt told Americans during a radio broadcast on December 9, 1941. “Every single man, woman and child is a partner in the most tremendous undertaking of our American history.” The United States had just joined the Allies in a global war against Nazi Germany, Fascist Italy, and imperial Japan that had been raging for two years. Sixteen million Americans donned uniforms. The millions more who stayed home were a vast civilian army, mobilized by the government to finance the war effort, conserve natural resources, and produce a continuous flow of war matériel.

The war permeated nearly all aspects of everyday life in America. As natural resources—even agricultural output—were diverted to support war production and the troops, Americans endured shortages and rationing. Newspapers, radio broadcasts, and newsreels tracked the war’s progress. Movie theaters were filled with patriotism-building, morale-boosting movies that pitted heroic Americans against villainous Nazis and fanatical Japanese, and depicted a home front united for victory. And thousands of government-produced posters directed a massive effort to transform the nation into an efficient war machine.

Even for children, the reality of a nation at war could not be avoided. Many of their favorite characters from the funny pages and comic books went off to fight. Superman—classified 4-F when his X-ray vision skewed a preinduction eye test—encouraged them to use their pennies for victory bonds. Toys and games enabled them to play make-believe combat, albeit with wooden guns and paper soldiers—all metal was needed for war production. And government campaigns encouraged them to assist in scrap drives or to help in their family’s victory gardens.

Lesson:

Introduce the lesson using the quote from President Roosevelt, “We are all in it—all the way. Every single man, woman and child is a partner in the most tremendous undertaking of our American history.” Have a class discussion about what Roosevelt meant by this. Discuss how and why, during World War II, the government launched a campaign to unite Americans behind the war effort. Watch the video of Disney war cartoons, and ask the students what the intention of these cartoons could have been.

Next, pass out the images accompanying this lesson. Have students—on their own or in groups—answer the following questions about the images: What does this image show? What was its purpose? Who was the intended audience? What effect might it have had on American society during World War II? Do you think this image is a form of propaganda? Why?

Bring the class together for a discussion of the objects and images they examined. What were some characteristics of this social mobilization campaign? Many underage boys ran away to join the military and lied about their age. Might this have been partly a result of the materials targeted at kids? Finally, have students share with the rest of the class the results of their image analysis.

Follow-up Activity:

Have students search for images of Topps’ 1991 Operation Desert Storm trading cards. Point out the similarities and differences between the wartime images in World War II and those from this more recent conflict. For homework, have the students answer the same questions about the Desert Storm images. Also, ask them to write a paper comparing the propaganda aimed at children during World War II to the trading cards during Desert Storm. What were the similarities? What were the differences? What about today? Ask students to consider their own reactions to America’s current military actions.
